How Can You Use These Data? Here's How Others Use The Data!

Market Share	Businesses compare sales in a geographic area to census data to compute market share . . . assess their own growth . . . evaluate product lines
Operating rates	Businesses compare wage rates, productivity, and other values to averages observed in the censuses
Targeting sales	Firms with national networks or sales forces use census data to lay out sales territories . . . allocate advertising funds . . . locate new stores and offices
Finding markets	Manufacturers and suppliers look at merchandise and commodity line sales to find out what kinds of business buy or sell their products
Monitoring business activity	Associations and chambers of commerce study census results to alert their members about developments in local and national economies . . . compare census data to results of their own member surveys
Economic development	State and local agencies monitor census data to understand their economic base and attract business

See the Big Picture

The Censuses of Retail Trade, Wholesale Trade, Service Industries and Transportation are part of the 1987 Economic Censuses. These are conducted at five-year intervals in years ending in 2 and 7 and consist of seven separate censuses:

- Census of Retail Trade
- Census of Wholesale Trade
- Census of Service Industries
- Census of Transportation
- Census of Manufactures
- Census of Mineral Industries
- Census of Construction

... plus several related programs: enterprise statistics; information on minority-owned and women-owned businesses; and the Census of Outlying Areas, including separate economic censuses of Puerto Rico and other outlying areas. The Census of Agriculture and Census of Governments are conducted separately.

Use the form on page 11 to request order forms and free information about these census programs, including the Guide to the 1987 Economic Censuses and the Guide to the 1987 Census of Agriculture.

The electronic data products and printed reports described in this pamphlet will be published between 1989 and 1991. You may place orders in advance for any product listed. You should be prepared to wait if you place your order well in advance of the scheduled release date. Contact Census Customer Services at 1-202-455-4100 if you have questions about the release dates for a particular report.
